For Bahá'ís Seeking Help with Relationship and Marriage Matters

An Information and Referral Resource from Marriage Transformation®

Updated July 5, 2019

What Help Do You Need?

Type of Professional: This list contains a variety of types of helping professions, each with different training and focus areas. As you consider how to choose someone, think through what your needs are and whether you prefer in-person sessions or whether working over the Internet by video conference can work well for you. Many of the professionals on this list are willing to work with people globally over the Internet.

If you are dealing with complex issues that have occurred over many years, you may need a trained therapist or counselor to help you. If you simply need knowledge and skill-building, a coach or educator may be a better fit. You may need both! For an explanation of marriage education, please see this link:

<http://www.bahaimarriage.net/learning.htm>.

The links below may assist you in considering what questions to ask of a counseling professional in screening them to be a fit for you. If you are having a marriage issue, please see someone trained in marriage counseling/couples and not someone just trained to work with individuals. It's also wise to ensure they are pro-marriage rather than automatically encouraging divorce.

Working with a non-Bahá'í professional: If you decide that you need in-person help, and there are no professionals in your area who are Bahá'ís, you may need to help the professional understand your religious views. For Bahá'ís who seek help from a non-Bahá'í practitioner, a document is available to give to the person entitled "When You Are Counseling Members of the Bahá'í Faith on Issues Related to a Troubled Marriage, Separation, Reconciliation Effort, or Divorce". It helps you avoid having to spend considerable time in a session explaining the Bahá'í Faith and its views on marriage. It is downloadable from this website page:

http://www.bahaimarriage.net/resources_troubledmarriages.html

Online education opportunity: A multi-disciplinary faculty/mentor team offers Bahá'í-based courses regularly on relationship and marriage topics through the Wilmette Institute, an agency of the United States National Spiritual Assembly. There are courses for singles, unmarried couples, married couples, and parents. Courses are open to people at any relationship stage and any religion. Scholarships and discounts are available. Details are available at: <http://wilmetteinstitute.org/ourcourses/marriage/> Marriage Transformation also offers courses at www.transformationlearningcenter.com.

Selection of Bahá'í Guidance

The guidance below is a selection that relates to the use of counseling for Bahá'ís who need assistance with relationship and marriage matters.

Below are extracts from the Department of the Secretariat written on behalf of the Universal House of Justice with guidance that may assist counsellors and other professionals who are Bahá'ís and giving advice to clients who are Bahá'ís on topics related to marriage.

THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE
DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARIAT

24 September 2014

Transmitted by email: susanne@marriagetransformation.com
Ms. Susanne M. Alexander
U.S.A.

...Your ongoing efforts to contribute to strengthening the institution of marriage by assisting individuals and couples through the study and application of principles derived from the Bahá'í Teachings are warmly appreciated. It is understood that, as you pursue this work, individuals sometimes raise questions about the application of Bahá'í marriage law to their circumstances, and it is in this connection that you have requested copies of recent letters written on this subject and clarification of the concept of conflict within marriage. However, the provision of guidance on administrative matters such as the laws of engagement, marriage, and divorce falls under the purview of Local and National Spiritual Assemblies; while Bahá'ís who are professional counselors are free to share with the friends extracts from the Bahá'í Writings and to offer advice of a general nature, it is best that they refer the friends in the first instance to their Local Spiritual Assemblies when questions arise about the application of the laws and Teachings of the Faith.

As a general guideline, it is preferable that individuals offering counselling who are Bahá'ís not create the impression that they are a source of guidance in this area [parental consent] but rather, as stated above, refer the friends to Spiritual Assemblies.

Regarding your query about conflict between the parties to a marriage, the term “conflict” encompasses a variety of conditions, ranging from contention to friendly disagreement. As you indicate, Bahá'u'lláh has forbidden His followers to engage in contention. He has also stressed the importance of consultation. Indeed, consultation within the family, employing full and frank discussion and animated by awareness of the need for moderation and balance, can be the panacea for domestic conflict. Besides assisting couples through their professional expertise, counselors can draw upon their insights into the Bahá'í Teachings to provide further assistance, such as by encouraging them to develop the skill of consultation and by helping them to distinguish concepts and practices current in society from those found in the Teachings. The views of professionals and of the wider society that are contrary to the Teachings will naturally have an impact on the friends in this age of transition. As the community grows in strength and as the Teachings become more fully understood and practiced by Bahá'ís, the distinctive characteristics of Bahá'í family life will become increasingly apparent. ...

With loving Bahá'í greetings,
Department of the Secretariat

Marriage Transformation® Referral to Professionals Resource List

"The House of Justice advises you to continue the strenuous efforts you are making to overcome the difficulties in your marriage. It is pleased to note that you and your husband have turned to the Local Spiritual Assembly for guidance and have sought help from a Bahá'í who is a marriage counsellor. Such endeavors, when combined with a strong and determined effort, improve greatly the prospects that your marriage can be maintained. However, it must also be borne in mind that the fact that Bahá'u'lláh has permitted divorce is, no doubt, an indication that in certain circumstances it is unavoidable. If your earnest efforts to maintain your marriage do not yield the desired result, you should not be distraught." (On behalf of the Universal House of Justice, April 28, 1989, to an individual believer, Compilation of Compilations, Vol. II, #2345)

"Consultation is...available for the individual in solving his own problems; he may consult with his Assembly, with his family and with his friends." (On behalf of the Universal House of Justice quoted in the "Understanding Tests" letter from the Research Department to the Universal House of Justice, July 17, 1989)

"Neither you nor your husband should hesitate to continue consulting professional marriage counselors, individually and together if possible, and also to take advantage of the supportive counseling which can come from wise and mature friends. Non-Bahá'í counseling can be useful but it is usually necessary to temper it with Bahá'í insight." (On behalf of the Universal House of Justice, Compilation of Compilations, Vol. II, "Preserving Bahá'í Marriages", p. 455)

Encouraging Couples to Turn to Institutions

For Baha'is, the Assemblies are the institutions who oversee the administration of marriage, divorce, and related matters, and they can provide authoritative guidance on specific matters and decisions on specific situations as needed. Where Assemblies have established a level of trust and confidence with a believer, that believer would naturally turn to it. If a couple knows of an Assembly they would like to reach out to, they are free to do so.

"Your ongoing efforts to contribute to strengthening the institution of marriage by assisting individuals and couples through the study and application of principles derived from the Bahá'í Teachings are warmly appreciated. It is understood that, as you pursue this work, individuals sometimes raise questions about the application of Bahá'í marriage law to their circumstances, and it is in this connection that you have requested copies of recent letters written on this subject and clarification of the concept of conflict within marriage. However, the provision of guidance on administrative matters such as the laws of engagement, marriage, and divorce falls under the purview of Local and National Spiritual Assemblies; while Bahá'ís who are professional counselors are free to share with the friends extracts from the Bahá'í Writings and to offer advice of a general nature, it is best that they refer the friends in the first instance to their Local Spiritual Assemblies when questions arise about the application of the laws and Teachings of the Faith." (On behalf of the Universal House of Justice to an individual, 9-14-14)

Institutions and their representatives are charged with spiritually guiding those who turn to them and ensuring that individuals and couples are aware of Bahá'í teachings and laws that apply to their circumstances. At times institutions have access to quotations and guidance that are not generally available from other sources. Institutions are not trained in counseling or offering professional advice, although part of their role can be to encourage people to also draw on science and professionals in harmony with the Faith. Bahá'í marriage is a spiritual entity, and so it is important to have it be supported by spiritual institutions.

If an individual or couple does not have easy access to an Assembly, or if they are hesitant to approach their Assembly, there are other options. Auxiliary Board members are available to consult with any believer in his or her care. Those who serve in the role of Protection are often experienced with helping friends through challenges. While an Auxiliary Board member does not have administrative authority, they can either directly or through an assistant, consult with a person or a couple, help them to consider the application of spiritual principles in their circumstances, and assist them to navigate the administrative processes with an Assembly, if necessary. Auxiliary Board members may also be familiar with the Local Assemblies in the wider area that can assist, should it be needed. Couples may also reach out to their National Spiritual Assemblies which can arrange for assistance to be provided.

All institutional representatives are available to assist and will collaborate as needed to walk with the souls of those needing guidance. It is important for individuals and couples to know that consulting with institutions about a problem is not backbiting. These institutions are sworn to uphold confidentiality; however, you may feel more comfortable about this if you discuss it directly with the institution involved. You may also request that individuals on the Assembly don't offer personal opinions about your situation but that the Assembly consult and give you their unified input.

Where a couple is not willing or ready to share specific information about their marriage, or the matters involved are ones where they are being helped by a professional, there is still spiritual benefit in turning to the institutions with a request for prayers. There is protection and help for the marriage and family by being under the umbrella of the institutions and the Covenant of Bahá'u'lláh.

“... [The Spiritual Assembly's] steady advancement requires an unbending commitment to promote the best interests of the community and a vigilance in guarding the process of growth against the forces of moral decay that threaten to arrest it. ... And sustaining its gradual maturation is unshakable faith in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's assurance that He will enfold every Spiritual Assembly within the embrace of His care and protection.” (Universal House of Justice, Framework for Action, 16.22)

Note: Every situation has its own unique elements. At times couples may not be able to meet with a local institution and will have to reach out further. Often Assemblies will encourage couples to obtain counseling or other assistance from professionals.

Referral List

(Presented in Alphabetical Order by Last Name)

Note: This is not a recommendation list; each person or couple will need to screen the people on the list to find a “good fit” for them.

This document provides a list of Bahá'ís who are therapists, counselors, coaches, or relationship and marriage educators willing to work with individuals and couples over the phone, email, Internet-based videoconference, or in person (not all are willing to do all of these). Most of them are skilled with relationship and marriage issues but they may also handle other topics.

Julie Walker is an intuitive with a specialty in medical issues. She does appointments weekdays only and in the mornings. Appointments last 1 hour and are usually over the phone but can be in person (when you get your appointment time, note which time zone the time is for...she is in Central Time). You can ask all types of questions about health and wellbeing, but also anything that is on your mind about your life, family members, or work. She had near death experiences when very young and ended up with this gift. She can help discover what is going on in your body, even when the doctors are baffled. She can recommend supplements or foods that will help. Prepare ahead of time by writing down clear questions that you have about your physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual wellbeing. She responds to whatever questions are most important to you, and it's best if you minimally talk and let her do most of the talking. If there's something weighing on your mind about a close family member or friend, she can check that out too (you may want to ask their permission first). It is highly recommended to record the appointment, as re-listening to the session can be helpful. Julie stays very booked, so it often takes a few weeks to get an appointment.
